I've created a website with Bootstrap 3 and would like to include some webp icons but unfortunately they don't seem to display in either IE or Chrome. I've tried setting the following in the config section of web.config and through the Global.asax.cs code. and in the Global.asax Response.Cache.SetVaryByParams(new HttpCacheVaryByParams { { "key", "Accept" }, { "key", "enforce" }, { "key", "requested" }, { "key", "accepts" }, { "key", "os" } }); I've also read about a possible issue with the alpha channel but according to this answer the resolution has been addressed since IE9. I've tried all of these with no luck. The following is the link to the website I'm working on: I've also put the images into a local server just to confirm that the issue is indeed the Internet Explorer not displaying the webp icon and not the local server. Any help would be greatly appreciated. A: I've found the problem. Apparently, some people using the IP address to open the site in a different region doesn't have the webp support enabled by default, so you have to add the webp tag to the section of the html page in order to see the icons.
