Or, as the Financial Times reported last week, how can a private equity firm sell shares in itself? Well, the answer may be emerging in the form of a new tax incentive that allows investors to exchange one kind of buyout fund for another. The tax code currently recognizes a type of "closely-held private investment company" that is owned by individuals and that has $2 billion in earnings and at least 80 percent of its "assets" in the same industry. The firm's owners are also allowed to contribute between 50 percent and 100 percent of the purchase price to build up the company's equity base, which could then be sold in 2d92ce491b
